CHINA'S IMPORT TRADE AND THE FALL IN SILVER. Mr. Kopsch, the Statistical Secretary of the Chinese Imperial Maritime Costoms, in his review of the trade for 1.93 says :-The dislocation in exchange braight about by according a fictitious value to the rupes and closing the Indian mints to the counge of silver has resulted, as predicted, in a very serious fulling off in the entire trade from India to China. The net importation of opinior for the year lalthough largely augmented by including, for the first time, in the Customs returns the opium brought in janks from Singapore to Hainno, amounting to 1,102 piculs), has declined to the extent of 2,674 pionls or from 70,781 picula in 1892 to 68,103 picula during the year under review. The protection of the rupes enhanced the price of opium so greatly that it placed the Indian drug beyond the means of a vast number of consumers, and this rise taking place concurrently with adequate supplies of Native opinm - which has so improved in quality that it is averred, smokers prefer it to Malwa -renders it almost hopeless for the imported drug to continue to compete successfully with the excellent and ever-improving home-grown product. The trade in Indian yarm has likewise undergone a sudden and severe check the quantity having receded from 1.254.400 piculs in 1892 to 937,800 piculs, or a decrease of 316,600 piculs. Ruw cotton from India has been similarly affected, the war's supply being only 53,400 picula, or just about half the quantity imported during the pravious 12 months. The deficiency in these two Indian staples ulone represents a decrease in the value of the Indo-Chiua import trade of over Hk. Tls. 4,745,000.
